

MANNINGTON EXPANDS TRENDSETTING
INVERNESS HARDWOOD LINE FOR 2008

The introduction of the Inverness collection in 2007 brought with it a new day for Mannington hardwood. Characterized by authentic texture and glazed edge treatments, the collection offers unique craftsmanship and depth not seen in ordinary hardwood floors. To build on that success, Mannington introduces four new looks that offer legendary style and detail. They are:

Glenmore Hickory: The use of heavy edge glazing enhances the warm underglow inherent to this wood in both the Flaxen and Russet colors. An intricate 4-layer staining process adds color depth as it's only found in a Mannington floor.

Scottish Amberwood: Deep, rustic scraping and glazed edges accentuate the splits and wormholes that add charm and authenticity to this floor. Created to complement similar looks seen in today's most popular furniture design, Scottish Amberwood is available in a lighter Barley color, or the deep, rich colors of Henna and Rust.

Wiltshire Walnut: With hand-planed texture and heavy glazing on both the plank faces and edges, the brilliance of the walnut grain takes center stage in both the Riverstone and Tawny hues.

Stonehenge Walnut: The distinctive whitewashed finish on this floor is brought to life with hand-planed details, glazed edges, and drybrushed accents. In either Alabaster or Iron Gate, this floor is uniquely Mannington.

“The marketplace has been hungry for hardwoods that are fresh and new, and we think that these Inverness looks provide just that,” said Dan Natkin, Director of Hardwood Business at Mannington. “In addition, in a tight market like we've been experiencing, others hunker down and cut back on new products. But we're in a fashion business, and we believe it's important to invest in fashion forward trends. So when the market comes back, Mannington will be at the forefront.”

Inverness products will be shown at Surfaces and available in mid-February.
